GENEVA (R) — U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz on Sunday held talks with the U.S. ambassador to Lebanon on efforts under way to free four American hostages held there. Mr. Shultz said Ambassador Reginald Bartholomew had told him that "there seems to be more pressure on the situation right now." He said in a television interview that he had asked Mr. Bartholomew to come to Geneva "because we had a sense of some motion" that he wanted to discuss. British church envoy Terry Waite said in Beirut earlier Sunday that he was going to meet U.S. officials to discuss his efforts to secure the hostages' release. He later flew to London (See page 2). White House spokesman Larry Speakes said administration officials would be eager to meet Mr. Waite in Geneva, London or Washington.

Iraq says Iranian jets driven off

BAGHDAD (R) — Iraq denied a Tehran statement that Iranian planes on Sunday bombed industrial-military centres west of the northern Iraqi city of Sulaymaniyah. The daily war communique said two Iranian planes crossed into Iraqi airspace over Sulaymaniyah at 7:00 a.m. (0400 GMT), but anti-aircraft gunners drove them off. The Iraqi News Agency, meanwhile, quoted a military spokesman as saying there were no such centres in the area. Iraq said on Friday two Iranian planes attacked civilian parts of the city, wounding six people. Sunday's communique also accused Iran for the first time in several months of shelling residential areas in the southern port of Basra. It gave no details of casualties or damage.

OIC criticises U.S. actions

JEDDAH (AP) — The secretary general of the Organisation of Islamic Conference (OIC) on Sunday expressed concern over reports of attempts by the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) to destabilise the Libyan government. Sharifuddin Pirzada, in a written statement issued by the OIC secretariat here, denounced "all measures seeking to undermine and destabilise legitimate governments" and said interference in the internal affairs of a country was contrary to international laws. He emphasised that the major powers "bear a special responsibility for the observance of international principles which are necessary for peaceful co-existence among sovereign states."

Shi'ite group claims kidnap of 4 Jews

BEIRUT (R) — A Shi'ite Muslim group said on Sunday it was holding four Jews kidnapped in Lebanon and demanded the release of prisoners held by Israel and its militia allies in South Lebanon as the price of their freedom. The claim from the "Organisation of the Oppressed in the World" came in a typewritten Arabic statement delivered to an international news agency in Beirut. The group accused Israel of holding more than 300 prisoners at Khiam in South Lebanon. It said Khiam had been set up to replace Aitf prison near Haifa, from which Israel freed more than 1,000 Lebanese and Palestinians this summer.

Greeks stage anti-U.S. rally

ATHENS (R) — Youthful demonstrators chanting anti-American slogans marched to the U.S. embassy here on Sunday to mark the 12th anniversary of a student uprising that helped topple Greece's seven-year military dictatorship. The demonstrators, mostly students, shouted "Americans, murderers of peoples," and "Reagan — Fascist murderer." They dispersed peacefully after the march, which has been held every year since democracy was restored in 1974. Athens police gave no exact figure this year but student sources said more than 100,000 took part in the march, sponsored by the ruling Panhellenic Socialist movement and the Greek Communist Party.

Sudan army chief visits Libya

BEIRUT (R) — The commander-in-chief of Sudan's armed forces, General Mohamed Tawfik, arrived in Tripoli on Sunday on a visit designed to enhance military cooperation with Libya, the official Libyan News Agency JANA said. JANA received here, said Gen. Tawfik, a member of Sudan's ruling transitional military council, was met at the airport by his Libyan opposite number Brigadier Abu Bakr Yunis Jabir. Sudan signed a military protocol with Libya soon after the military coup which toppled former President Jaafar Numeiri last April, and Libya's Colonel Muammar Qadhafi was the first foreign leader to visit post-coup Khartoum.

King Hussein arrives in Oman

MUSCAT (Agencies) — His Majesty King Hussein arrived here Sunday to take part in Oman's celebrations marking the 15th anniversary of its National Day.

King meets Zia and Mubarak

MUSCAT (Petra) — His Majesty King Hussein held talks with Pakistani President Zia ul Haq and Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak on Sunday. The King met the two leaders separately after his arrival here earlier Sunday. The King, President Mubarak and President Zia are here to attend celebrations marking Oman's National Day.

The King was welcomed upon his arrival by Sultan Jaboon Ibn Sa'id of Oman and senior Omani officials. After an official welcome ceremony at the airport, the King was accompanied by Sultan Jaboon to Jaser Al Bustan. The King will be staying at the palace during his visit to Oman. The King was seen off at Amman Airport by His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hassan, His Royal Highnesses Prince Abdullah and Prince Faisal. Speaker of the Upper House of Parliament Ahmad Al Lawzi, Court Minister Adnan Abu Odeh, Chief Chamberlain Prince Ra'id Ibn Zaid, Deputy Prime Minister Abdul Wahab Al Majali, Armed Forces Commander-in-Chief Gen. Sharif Zaid Ibn Shaker, cabinet members, Public Security Department Director Abdul Hadi Al Majali, Army Chief-of-Staff Lt. Gen. Fathi Abu Taleb and the Omani charge d'affaires in Amman.

Before the King's departure, Prince Hassan was sworn in as Regent. King Hussein is accompanied by Prime Minister Zaid Al Rifai, Royal Court Chief Marwan Al Jassim and Foreign Minister Taher Al Masihi. According to the Sawi Al Shaah Arabic daily, King Hussein will also visit Saudi Arabia, North Yemen and Kuwait after the Oman visit.

It said that the tour is aimed at holding consultations with Arab leaders on various efforts being made to consolidate Arab solidarity and enhance the Arab stand vis-a-vis efforts for a just and durable peace in the Middle East. Other foreign leaders also flew in Sunday to join in Oman's biggest national celebrations marking 15 years of rule by Sultan Jaboon. The Sultan celebrates his 45th birthday on Monday and the occasion is providing the opportunity for high-level international diplomacy.

His guests include Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and Pakistan's President Zia ul Haq. Mr. Gandhi and Mr. Zia are expected to meet privately to try to defuse bilateral problems. The celebrations are the most elaborate and expensive ever staged in a country not noted for its extravagance and are seen here as marking Oman's transformation from an isolated economy to a modern state with a growing international influence.

Egypt's semi-official Al Ahram newspaper said Sultan Jaboon was expected to brief Mr. Mubarak on the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) summit held in Muscat earlier this month. Egyptian officials declined to comment on a Kuwait newspaper report that the summit, which brought together the heads of state of Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Bahrain, Oman, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates, took important decisions on future relations with Cairo.

All the GCC members except for Oman severed relations with Egypt following its 1979 separate peace treaty with Israel. Another guest of Sultan Jaboon is former U.S. President Gerald Ford. Mr. Ford also arrived on Sunday.

Mr. Ford, who was defeated by Jimmy Carter in the 1980 presidential elections, will be representing President Ronald Reagan during the celebrations, which begin Monday.

Iraq says some progress made in efforts to settle rift with Libya

RABAT (Agencies) — Iraq indicated on Sunday that an Arab mediation committee had made progress in healing Iraqi-Libyan differences and the two countries will pursue dialogue aimed at settling their differences.

Iraqi First Deputy Prime Minister Taha Yassin Ramadan said the committee, which ended talks here on Saturday, had made some headway towards reconciling Iraq and Libya.

In a departure statement on Sunday, Mr. Ramadan said he and Major Kholidi Lahmudi, head of the Libyan delegation to the meeting, had explained their points of view to the committee.

Iraq severed diplomatic relations with Libya in June when Tripoli said it had signed a strategic alliance with Iraq's Gulf war foe, Iran.

The meeting formed part of a multi-pronged initiative by the Arab League to settle differences among its members to pave the way for an Arab summit planned for Saudi Arabia. One result has already been a rapprochement between Syria and Jordan.

The committee met here, comprising the leaders of Morocco, Mauritania and the United Arab Emirates (UAE), has also been mandated to try to reconcile Libya with the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO).

An official statement issued after the talks said the committee would send a delegation to see Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi and Iraqi President Saddam Hussein. The committee will continue to try to achieve agreement, the statement added.

The statement said the committee "established the good faith, sincerity and readiness of both sides to have relations based on the principles governing relations between Arab League members."

Arab diplomats said they believed Iraq was demanding that Libya at least stay neutral in the five-year-old Gulf war.

PLO sources said it was not clear whether, because of the time taken up by the Libyan-Iraqi issue, the committee would hold a formal session to examine the Libyan-PLO relationship.

But they said a Palestinian delegation led by Farouk Kaddoumi, head of the PLO's Political Department, met informally with the Libyans here and was expected to meet King Hassan.

PLO sources told Reuters that following Mr. Kaddoumi's three-hour meeting with Col. Qadhafi in September, relations had improved and were already near normal.

Kuwait calls on Geneva summit to give priority to Mideast

KUWAIT (R) — Kuwait called on Sunday for the Middle East to be given priority at the superpower summit, while a visiting Soviet official said Israel must give up occupied Arab lands to achieve just and lasting peace.

Vladimir Polyakov, director of Moscow's Foreign Ministry Department for Middle East Affairs, reiterated Soviet calls for an international conference on the Middle East conflict.

This should be attended by the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO), along with all other parties concerned, Mr. Polyakov said in a statement carried by the Kuwait News Agency, KUNA.

His remarks followed talks with Kuwaiti Foreign Minister Sheikh Sabah Al Ahmad Al Sabah, which KUNA said dealt with Arab affairs and the Geneva summit starting on Tuesday between the Soviet and U.S. leaders.

"Sheikh Sabah expressed hope that the U.S. and Soviet leaders would give priority to the Middle East conflict, and the security of the Gulf in their talks," KUNA said.

Mr. Polyakov said apart from an Israeli withdrawal from Arab lands occupied since 1967, guarantees of legitimate national Palestinian rights, including the right to self-determination and an independent state, were prerequisites for peace.

His visit here coincided with a fresh Soviet diplomatic offensive in the Gulf, where Kuwait has for many years been the only member of the six-nation Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) to have

Spanish crown prince pays brief visit to Amman

AMMAN (Petra) — Spanish Crown Prince Felipe de Borbon made a brief stopover in Amman on Sunday on his way to Muscat to represent King Juan Carlos of Spain in celebrations marking Oman's National Day.

His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hassan, the Regent, received and saw off Prince Felipe upon his arrival at and departure from Amman airport.

Also receiving and seeing off Prince Felipe were Their Royal Highnesses Prince Abdullah and Prince Faisal, Chief Chamberlain

Prince Ra'id Ibn Zaid, Royal Court Secretary General Rajai Dajani, Public Security Department Director, Lieutenant-General Abdul Hadi Al Majali, the commander of the Royal Jordanian Air Force, Spanish Ambassador in Amman Emilio Mendez and embassy staff.

Prince Felipe is currently receiving his university education at Spanish universities and military education at the Spanish military college. He also represents King Juan Carlos in several social and cultural occasions at the national and international levels.

Sheikh Sabah praises closer Jordan-Syria ties

KUWAIT (R) — Kuwait's Foreign Minister Sheikh Sabah Al Ahmad Al Sabah has called the rapprochement between Syria and Jordan a good omen for a return to Arab solidarity.

"I have hopes that Arab solidarity will replace Arab rifts," the daily Al Rai Al Aam quoted Sheikh Sabah as saying. "There is a good omen in the improved relations between Syria and Jordan," he added.

A special Arab summit in Casablanca last August set up reconciliation committees to resolve inter-Arab disputes and lay the groundwork for a summit in Saudi Arabia.

One committee, which includes Saudi Arabia and Tunisia, has succeeded in bringing Amman and Damascus closer together, and will also mediate between Iraq and Syria.

Another, made up of the heads of state of Morocco, the United Arab Emirates and Mauritania, brought together Iraq and Libya at talks in Rabat, which ended on Saturday.

In Damascus, Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati met President Hafez Al Assad for talks. Diplomats said they were likely to centre on Syria's rapprochement with Jordan.

The Syrian News Agency said Mr. Velayati discussed Middle East developments with Mr. Assad and delivered a message from Iranian President Ali Khamenei, but gave no further details of the meeting.

Arafat due in Delhi today

AMMAN (J.T.) — Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat was expected to leave for India late Sunday or early Monday for talks with Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi on efforts for Middle East peace, informed sources said.

Mr. Gandhi was in Oman Sunday to attend celebrations marking the 15th anniversary of Oman's National Day but is expected to be back in New Delhi on Tuesday for the meeting with Mr. Arafat, the sources said.

There were unconfirmed reports from Delhi that His Majesty King Hussein will hold talks with Mr. Gandhi during their stay in Oman. The King arrived in Oman on Sunday.

Mr. Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO), is expected to leave Delhi for Baghdad on Wednesday to chair a meeting of the PLO Executive Committee in the Iraqi capital, the sources in Amman said.

The focus of the Baghdad meeting is expected to be future moves of the PLO in Middle East peace efforts and recent events involving rapprochement between Arab states before the convening of the next Arab summit.

In an interview with Reuters on Saturday, Mr. Arafat welcomed last week's rapprochement between Jordan and Syria and appealed to Damascus to join the Jordanian-Palestinian Middle East peace initiative.

Mr. Arafat said the improvement in ties between Jordan and Syria would not affect the Feb. 11 Jordanian-PLO accord, which calls for an international conference to settle the Palestinian issue.

The PLO was committed to the accord as were the King and the Jordanian government, he added. "I call yet again on (Syrian) President (Hafez Al) Assad to join the Feb. 11 accord," he said.

Mr. Arafat spoke after a meeting with the King.

Salah Khalaf, the number two man in Fateh, told reporters on Sunday efforts were being made to heal rifts among Palestinian groups and this would be one main topic at the forthcoming meeting

Superpowers remain apart on key summit issues

GENEVA (R) — Senior U.S. and Soviet officials both said on Sunday that this week's Geneva summit should be a turning point in superpower relations but remained far apart on the main issues their leaders will discuss.

Presenting their negotiating platforms at news conferences in Geneva, spokesmen from the two sides set out widely divergent views on the central question of arms control and each accused the other of adopting unreasonable positions.

U.S. President Ronald Reagan's spokesman, Larry Speakes, said the success of the summit should not be measured in terms of the agreements it produced but the way it forged a new basis for relations between Washington and Moscow.

"What we're seeking is long-term progress to make the relationship more stable, more predictable and perhaps a road map for the future," he added.

Georgy Arbatov, Moscow's top expert on U.S.-Soviet ties, said Communist Party leader Mikhail Gorbachev also wanted to see the summit mark a fresh start.

"We are taking these talks seriously and want to make them a turning point in Soviet-U.S. relations and in international relations as a whole," Arbatov added.

But General Nikolai Chervov, a top arms control expert, sounded a deeply pessimistic note on the prospects of making progress on arms reductions during the talks between Mr. Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev on Tuesday and Wednesday.

"The position of the two sides remains principally divergent," Gen. Chervov said. A common theme at the presentations given by both camps was a controversial letter from U.S. Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger urging Mr. Reagan to avoid a Geneva pledge to continue to honour the unratified SALT II arms treaty (White House Irritated by Weinberger's letter, page 8).

Arbatov furiously condemned Mr. Weinberger and said the letter underlined Soviet suspicions that the United States was trying to block progress in cutting nuclear arsenals and wreck agreements signed so far.

"It is this letter that is an attempt to torpedo the entire arms

Almost no polio, diphtheria in Jordan, Hamzeh says

AMMAN (Petra) — The Health Ministry announced Sunday that polio is almost non-existent in Jordan and the diphtheria cases among children have nearly vanished due to vaccination campaigns carried out by medical teams around the country.

Health Minister Zeid Hamzeh announced the news at a meeting in Amman with senior ministry officials and representatives of the World Health Organisation (WHO) and the United Nations Children Fund (UNICEF). He said that although vaccines are available free of charge at all Health Ministry clinics in the Kingdom, there still are some cases of measles among children and that is sometimes due to negligence on the part of the parents.

A study conducted last month by UNICEF on children's diseases and vaccination campaigns showed that Jordan is among the most advanced and efficient Third World nations regarding combating children's diseases, Dr. Hamzeh said.

He said that the Health Ministry will continue to distribute vaccines to children and pregnant women free of charge at all its clinics around the country. The ministry has also assigned some teams to tour rural and remote badia regions to carry out vaccinations wherever needed, the minister added.

Leading Soviet eye surgeon departs after performing 60 cornea replacement operations

AMMAN (Petra) — The director of Moscow's Eye Surgery Institute Professor Vedorov Svatoslav left Amman Sunday at the end of a several day visit to Jordan. During his stay in the Kingdom, the eye specialist visited medical facilities of the armed forces and performed a number of eye operations at Jordanian hospitals.

Upon his departure, Professor Svatoslav said in a statement to the Jordanian News Agency, Petra, that he was grateful for the Independence Medal conferred on him by His Majesty King Hussein and he paid tribute to Jordanian eye specialists who, he said, have attained a very high level of efficiency. Professor Svatoslav, who attended the country's celebrations for King Hussein's 50th birthday, also said that his visit to Jordan helped him to feel the true friendship of the Jordanian people and the strong ties between Jordan and the Soviet Union.

He said that the 60 operations he conducted at King Hussein Medical City were for the replacement of damaged corneas and to train local surgeons in new techniques employed in eye operations.

Dr. Ibrahim Ayesh, head of the medical city's eye department, said that a new technique of microscopic surgery for the cornea is of great interest to doctors and will be of great benefit to patients in Jordan. According to Dr. Ayesh, the medical city has sent a team of specialists to Moscow for training in this technique which was employed by Dr. Svatoslav during the operations he conducted in Jordan.

The Moscow institute, he said, was established in 1980 and has 500 beds for patients from 50 nations around the world. He said that this institute annually offers treatment to 1,500 Arab patients free of charge.

Senior officials, USAID director discuss assistance for developmental projects

AMMAN (Petra) — Director General of the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) Peter McPherson Sunday met with Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Education Abdul Wahab Al Majali for discussions on U.S. aid to assist Jordan with its development projects.

They discussed a number of projects to which USAID might contribute or participate and reviewed being implemented with U.S. assistance or financial aid. The meeting was attended by Mr. Charles Greenleaf, assistant director of USAID, and Minister of Planning Abdullah Nsour.

Mr. McPherson, who arrived in Amman Sunday morning on a two-day visit to Jordan, is due to hold more talks with a number of senior officials on the U.S. economic and technical aid programme to Jordan.

USAID has this year offered Jordan $17 million for financing a project to develop agriculture in the highland regions, and has given the country $160 million to finance the importation of goods and services by the public and private sectors in Jordan.

Mr. Greenleaf later held a separate meeting with Mr. Mohammad Saleh Al Keilani, the director general of the Water Authority of Jordan (WAJ). They discussed USAID financing for a number of WAJ water and sewerage projects in the country.

Mr. McPherson earlier held a meeting with Dr. Nsour at the Planning Ministry and reviewed USAID's aid programme to Jordan. Dr. Nsour discussed the possibility of transferring U.S. technology to Jordan through a number of development schemes and within the framework of technical cooperation between the two countries.

Dr. Nsour also briefed Mr. McPherson on Jordan's five-year development plan and areas where investments are possible and the role of the private and public sectors in implementing the plan. Dr. Nsour paid tribute to USAID for its past and present assistance to Jordan.

During the meeting Mr. McPherson praised Jordan's economic, political and financial policies in implementing its development plans. Later Sunday Mr. McPherson toured a number of development projects in the Kingdom and was briefed on the progress of work.

Departments fail to collect JD 6.6m in outstanding payments, report says

AMMAN (J.T.) — A report presented to parliament by General Audit Bureau Director Hashem Al Dabbas reveals that government departments last year failed to collect outstanding loan payments and dues totalling JD 6,645,863 at the end of 1984. The report also said that the Income Tax Department has still to collect some JD 7 million for 1984 alone.

The uncollected sums are in the form of loans to various organisations and employees, uncollected fees owed to government or municipal councils and losses in operating business.

The report said that investigations revealed embezzlement, manipulation of accounts, and forgery at Amman municipality courts, the Department of Statistics, the Free Zones Corporation, the Finance Department in Aqaba, the lands registration department in Karak, the post office in Hassa, the water project for Zarqa, the municipalities of Wadi Seer and Al Ain Al Baida and the office of Alia, the Royal Jordanian Airline, in Morocco.

The report called on parliament to enact stricter regulation and control over the financial affairs of government departments and requested permission to audit the accounts of a number of departments which are at present outside the bureau's jurisdiction. These are the Civil Service Consumer Corporation, Yarmouk University, Al Hussein Youth City, the Pension Fund, the Cities and Villages Development Bank, the Central Bank of Jordan, the Jordan Medical Council and the Social Security Corporation.

According to the report, losses sustained in some government projects resulted from ill-planning and inadequate feasibility studies and delays in implementation of projects.

control process," he added.

But both Speakers and Mr. Reagan's National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane sought to play down the significance of the letter. Mr. McFarlane called the leak of its contents unfortunate but said it would not be a matter of consequence at the summit.

"I would bet you five bucks that at the dinners on Tuesday and Wednesday, Gorbachev does not lean across the table and ask, 'What about the Weinberger letter,'" Speaker said.

Mr. Reagan met some of his senior advisers on Sunday to prepare for the two days of talks. Mr. Gorbachev was scheduled to arrive in Geneva Monday morning.

Arbatov, Gen. Chervov, Kremlin spokesman Leonid Zamyatin and space weapons expert Yevgeny Velikhov spent an hour giving a detailed breakdown of Moscow's arms proposals, outlining some elements previously only made public by the Americans.

The official Soviet press attacked the United States on Sunday on fronts ranging from space weapons and Asian security to alleged U.S. human rights abuses.

Articles in the Communist Party newspaper Pravda and by TASS news agency expressed little hope that the Reagan-Gorbachev talks would produce significant results.

Pravda said people longed for arms accords and improved superpower relations, "but at the very same time not one observer and not one newspaper expresses confidence that the American side is ready to take real steps along this road."

Pravda said the United States still banked on military superiority over the Soviet Union and warned that, if necessary, Moscow would match Mr. Reagan's space missile defence programme, the strategic defence initiative (SDI).

TASS, commenting on a Reagan interview with Japanese reporters, said he had tried to scare Asian countries with a mythical Soviet threat.

"He said, among other things, that Washington favours a discussion at Geneva of the issue of the (medium-range) Soviet SS-20 missiles deployed in the Asian part of the Soviet Union," the agency said.

"Meanwhile, it is common knowledge that it is not the Soviet Union but the United States which has recently intensified its military preparations in the Asian-Pacific region," it added.

"As far as the missiles in the Asian part of the Soviet Union are concerned, they are deployed in precisely those numbers necessary to balance the U.S. potential in the region."

In developments related to the summit, Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres appealed on Sunday to President Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev to devote special attention to the issue of emigration of Soviet Jews at their Geneva talks.

In an unusual step, Peres opened his government's weekly meeting to reporters to announce the appeal.

He said he had indications, though no promises, that Moscow was considering allowing more Jews to leave the Soviet Union.

"I appeal to the two leaders — President Reagan of the United States and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev — to set this matter apart from all other joint concerns within the realm of the superpowers' discussions," Peres to the cabinet.

Israeli officials said this morning they were pressing ahead with contingency plans to absorb as many as 50,000 Jews from the Soviet Union if the Kremlin decided to allow the first mass exodus since 1979, when emigration peaked at 51,000.

of Palestinian leaders in Baghdad. Reiterating the support voiced by Mr. Arafat to the Syria-Jordan reconciliation, Palestine National Council (PNC) Speaker Abdul Hamid Al Sa'ed said Sunday the PNC was "in favour of any move and Arab cooperation or reconciliation."

From our position, we have no objection to reestablishing relations with brotherly Syria, but Syria must make this same call for it to happen," Sheikh Sa'ed said.

"If there is any objection to a Syrian-PLO rapprochement it is from the Syrian side," he said.

The PNC speaker, in Baghdad to attend a two-day meeting of Arab parliamentarians which ended Sunday (See page 2), was not optimistic about an immediate reconciliation between the PLO and Damascus, but he said their views were "almost identical" on the measures needed to solve the Palestinian problem.

"The points Syria is calling for regarding Palestinian rights and establishment of their own homeland are almost identical to what the PLO is calling for," he said.

Referring to the Feb. 11 Jordan-PLO agreement, Sheikh Sa'ed said Syria appeared to support it despite criticisms in the official Syrian press.

"(Syrian Foreign Minister) Farouq Al Shara'a, in his address to the U.N. General Assembly, virtually gave the go-ahead to our joint peace plan with Jordan," he said.

Israel-U.S. ties obscure case for Middle East Peace

By Merle Thorpe Jr.

AMERICAN misconceptions on the Middle East and the uncritical receptivity of the U.S. to the wishes of Israel and its spokespersons have combined in recent years to complicate and delay peaceful resolution of the tragic Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

Americans identify well with Israel, its hopes and fears. This reflects our sympathy for the unspeakable tragedy that befell Jews in World War II and our admiration for the Jewish contribution to Western culture and American society. Americans are less informed, and consequently less sensitive to the experience and attitudes of Arabs, and in particular the Palestinians. There has been a Western cultural bias against Muslims since the Crusades, and since World War II an effective campaign of anti-Arab stereotyping by supporters of Israel has added to the problem.

Israel was established in a portion of Mandatory Palestine in 1948 after a U.N. proposal for its partition into a Jewish state and an Arab state failed. Israel captured the remaining portions of the mandated territory, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, from Jordan and Egypt in the 1967 war. The much discussed U.N. Resolution 242 of 1967, which has served as the basis for all subsequent peace initiatives, called for Israeli withdrawal from territories it captured in return for Arab recognition and peace.

Americans are generally not aware that 90 per cent of the inhabitants of Mandatory Palestine in the early 1920s were Palestinian Arabs who sought the self-determination championed by President Woodrow Wilson. In 1948 Palestinian Arabs still constituted 67 per cent of the population. In the fighting which led to the establishment of the Jewish state, 600,000 Palestinians fled or were expelled. Their inability to return to their homes left deep scars, reflected in the name they adopted for their experience: "the catastrophe."

After 1967 a growing Arab willingness to negotiate peace with Israel was unfortunately accompanied by a growing Israeli determination to hold the West Bank and Gaza. Despite the provisions of international law requiring the maintenance of the status quo during a military occupation, Israel has actively settled these territories and, through questionable legal tactics, has confiscated 41 per cent of the land. Restrictions on an additional 11 per cent prevent its development by Palestinians.

The 1,400,000 Palestinians residing today in the West Bank and Gaza still constitute 97 per cent of the population of these territories. World opinion virtually unanimously favours the territories becoming a Palestinian "homeland" in which Palestinian culture can continue and with which all Palestinians can identify. Yitzhak Shamir's Likud Party favours incorporating the territories into Israel. Shimon Peres' Labour Party favours some territorial compromise.

The U.S. has always professed support for U.N. 242 and the resolution's principle of exchanging land for peace. However, the U.S. has never effectively challenged Israel's West Bank land-taking and settlement activity, which is inconsistent with this principle. Hundreds of millions of U.S. aid dollars have helped to finance the settlements. In a statement made, significantly, after they left office, ex-Presidents Carter and Ford termed Israel's settlements "the major obstacle to peace."

Since 1967 the U.S. has cast 14 solo vetoes in the U.N. Security Council to protect Israel from censure, many relating to Israel's West Bank settlement and land practices. The effect of these vetoes has been to link the U.S. alone to Israeli policy in the forum of world opinion.

The issue of greatest importance today relates to the recent PLO-Jordanian peace initiative. Once again the U.S. position accommodates Israel rather than reaching for new opportunities to peace. The first provision of the PLO-Jordanian statement "calls for Israeli withdrawal from occupied territories in exchange for 'comprehensive peace as established in United Nations and Security Council Resolutions.'"

President Reagan responded that the U.S. will continue to exclude PLO representatives in any discussions the U.S. might hold, until the PLO "accepts U.N. 242" and recognises Israel's "right to exist."

The president's position is not constructive for four reasons:

1. By insisting that the PLO adopt the exact language of U.N. 242, the U.S. ignores the reason why U.N. 242 is unsatisfactory to Palestinians — it makes no mention of Palestinians or Palestinian national rights, only of a "refugee problem."

2. The U.S. has long wished the PLO to demonstrate its willingness to negotiate peace with Israel. The reason there is a splinter PLO faction today in Damascus opposing Arafat is because Arafat and the mainstream PLO are seeking a negotiated settlement.

3. Recognition by and between parties should be a mutual matter. It is the object and, with good fortune, the outcome of negotiation. It is unbalanced to require it of one party and not the other.

4. The PLO is the symbol of Palestinian nationalism and is a necessary party to any Israeli peace. (Some U.S. presidents say the same after leaving office.) The respected member of The Jerusalem Post editorial board, Meir Merhav, has stated it best:

How long must it take, how many more wars must we fight, how many lives must be wasted and how crushing must the economic burthen become for the realisation to sink in that the PLO, despicable as it may appear to us, is the representative of the Palestinians and holds the power of veto over any group of Palestinians might agree upon in an Arab-Israeli settlement.

The U.S. today has a choice. It can continue a close identification with Israel's policy of not addressing the Palestinian question. If it does, it invites further enmity from among 150,000,000 Arabs and 800,000,000 Muslims. (Israel's policy also jeopardises the fragile Israeli-Egyptian peace, in which the U.S. has invested so heavily.)

Alternatively, the U.S. can be more independent of Israel and by so doing assist Israel to achieve peace. Accepting Merhav's counsel that the PLO is a necessary party to the resolution of the conflict would not be a change in U.S. policy requiring explanation or justification. It would merely be recognition that the mainstream PLO is interested in a negotiated settlement.

Merle Thorpe Jr. is president of the Foundation for Middle East Peace, Washington D.C.

Urgent support for PNF

THE Palestine National Fund (PNF) has just revealed facts that are serious enough to be capable of disrupting operations by the Jordan-PLO committee for strengthening the steadfastness of the Arab population in the occupied territories. A spokesman said that PNF resources are dwindling fast, and that the current deficit now stands at $100 million, making it difficult, if not impossible, for the joint committee to honour its commitments to the Arab population in the Israeli-occupied territory.

The spokesman, Mr. Jawid Al Ghusseini, said that additional funds are required to finance the operations of universities, support families of martyrs now living under Israeli rule and help find jobs for unemployed university graduates who are on the increase by the year. According to the spokesman, the subject of the PNF deficit was the main topic on the agenda of a recent meeting in Amman chaired by PLO leader Yasser Arafat. Of course the Jordan-PLO committee also discussed the deteriorating conditions of the Arab inhabitants under Israeli occupation, but in the light of this serious deficit and lack of funds, nothing can obviously be planned, and all programmes to support educational and health institutions would have to come to a standstill.

Jordan, which has very limited resources, has been shouldering its part of the burden in supporting the steadfastness of our Arab brethren in the occupied West Bank and the Gaza Strip. Arab countries had pledged at the Baghdad Arab Summit to provide financial assistance to Arab confrontation states including Jordan, but despite the fact that most of this assistance has now stopped, Jordan still manages to extend help to the Arab population of the West Bank and Gaza.

The Jordan-PLO committee has also sent out teams seeking help from Arab countries and managed to give loans and financial grants through the PNF to organisations in the occupied territories to help them withstand arbitrary measures by the Israeli authorities.

In reporting the PNF deficit Mr. Ghusseini said fresh Jordanian-PLO efforts will be made with Arab countries to raise sufficient funds to finance projects for the Palestinian people. If this appeal is not heeded both sides will indeed find themselves in a serious situation.

If the Arab countries find pretexts for not being able to hold a summit conference to solve their problems, they cannot find one single reason for not helping their brothers whom they know are suffering at the hands of their common enemy. If the steadfastness of the Arab population cannot be maintained, then it would be almost impossible for Jordan or the PLO to help keep the Arab people clinging on to their land and their homes any longer. Jordan and the PLO have been jointly launching world-wide efforts to find a just and lasting solution to the Palestine problem, and until that solution materialises, they require urgent support from Arab countries and they should be allowed to find it, and as soon as possible at this very critical stage.

Al Rai: Brotherly Turkey

TURKEY AND the Arab World are closely linked by culture, history and religion in addition to geographic proximity. There have been many conspiracies hatched by colonial forces in the past to sever relations between the two sides but the Arab and Turkish nations which have similar aspirations and common goals have maintained strong ties over the years. Jordan which has welcomed President Kenan Evren has always been supporting brotherly ties between the Arab and Turkish peoples, and has always tried to bolster cooperation between the two sides in all fields. Turkey has always supported Arab causes particularly the Arab rights in Palestine and Ankara has based its relations with us on mutual respect and fruitful cooperation for the benefit of both our peoples and for serving the cause of peace. We are certain that President Evren's visit to Jordan and his talks with King Hussein have further contributed towards a strengthening of bilateral relations; and we hope the fruits of such relations will emerge as a proof of their success. The Arab people in general and Jordan in particular appreciate Turkey's support and backing for our causes and for our endeavours to achieve justice.

Al Dustour: Turkey's support for peace

TURKISH PRESIDENT Kenan Evren's quick visit to Aqaba presented a good opportunity for him to hold useful consultations with His Majesty King Hussein on a number of issues of concern to Turkey and Jordan and the region as a whole. The Iran-Iraq war was discussed and the president voiced his country's deep concern over the unstable condition in the Gulf region due to this conflict and the continued loss of resources, men and material. The establishment of peace in the Middle East was also discussed by the two leaders, and attention was no doubt focused on the Jordan's initiatives to achieve peace through the implementation of U.N. resolutions and the Jordan-PLO accord. Besides these two important and basic issues the two leaders discussed development of cooperation between Jordan and Turkey for the interest of both peoples. The talks and their outcome displayed Jordan-Turkish deep concern over problems infesting this region, and their keenness on finding solutions for them. The two leaders agreed on the need to promote bilateral economic cooperation and bolster bilateral ties in all other fields.

Sawt Al Shaab: Hopes for reconciliation

AN ARAB mediation committee formed by the Arab summit at Casablanca seems to have gone a long way towards bringing about a total reconciliation among Arab countries. The first fruit of these mediations was the rapprochement between Syria and Jordan. Saudi Arabia and its partners in the Gulf Cooperation Council are no doubt exerting strenuous effort towards the achievement of a greater measure of agreement and harmony among Arab countries for the sake of paving the road to a successful Arab summit in Riyadh. These countries also hope to achieve success in bringing the Iran-Iraq war to an end. Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Saud Al Faisal has just announced that the call on Arab countries to meet in Riyadh still stands, and that there were indications that an end of differences between Iraq and Libya is in sight.

U.S.-Soviet summits from 1943-1979

Following is Historical Issue No. 20, prepared September 1985 by the Office of the Historian at the U.S. Department of State:

EVERY president since Franklin D. Roosevelt has participated in at least one meeting with the Soviet Premier or First Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. All such meetings through 1960 also included British and sometimes French leaders, except for the Eisenhower-Khrushchev meeting in 1959. Following the Paris summit of 1960 which ended prematurely because of the U-2 incident, all the meetings have been on a bilateral basis, although the occasion for the Helsinki summit of 1975 was a multilateral gathering. Ten of the 14 meetings have occurred during the months of May, June, or July.

Tehran (Roosevelt, Stalin, Churchill)
November-December 1943

The discussion centred on military matters, such as planning for the cross channel invasion (Operation OVERLORD) and the invasion of southern France. The three powers also agreed to try to get Turkey to join the war and to split Finland away from the Axis. There was general discussion about several political questions, such as a future world organization and postwar policy toward Germany. On certain contentious issues, such as the Polish question, decisions were postponed, which assured the conference an air of great cordiality.

Yalta (Roosevelt, Stalin, Churchill)
February 1945

The three leaders discussed the future of Poland and Eastern Europe, the nature of Security Council voting in the United Nations, the status of postwar Germany, and the conditions for Soviet entry into the Pacific War. In a Declaration on Liberated Europe, the Allies pledged to work toward the establishment of representative governments in the nations liberated from Axis domination through free elections. In a secret agreement, the Soviet Union promised to enter the Pacific War two to three months after Germany's surrender in return for certain Far Eastern concessions.

Potsdam (Truman, Stalin, Churchill-Attlee)
July 1945

Except for the military details of the Soviet entry into the Pacific War, the conference dealt with political questions, primarily the occupation of Germany and the question of German reparations. The three powers created a Council of Foreign Ministers to work on peace treaties with the Axis powers. In a declaration issued on July 26, they also demanded that Japan surrender unconditionally or be destroyed. During the conference, Truman learned of the successful test of the atomic bomb and informed Stalin in general terms.

Geneva (Eisenhower, Bulganin and Khrushchev, Eden, Faure)
July 1955

At this conference Eisenhower advanced a proposal (the "Open Skies" proposal) calling for an exchange of military blueprints with the Soviet Union and allowing aerial reconnaissance of each other's military installations. The participants also discussed disarmament, German reunification, and the need for greater East-West contacts through travel and the exchange of information.

Washington-Camp David (Eisenhower, Khrushchev)
September 1959

During Khrushchev's visit to the United States, arranged mainly by Eisenhower to acquaint the Soviet leader with the American way of life, the two leaders engaged in substantive talks for two days at Camp David. They agreed to expand exchanges and to remove the Soviet deadline for a Berlin settlement, but on other issues, such as disarmament and the reunification of Germany, no progress was made.

Paris (Eisenhower, Khrushchev, Macmillan, De Gaulle)
May 1960

The four leaders were planning to discuss Germany and Berlin, disarmament, nuclear testing, and the general state of East-West relations. On the second day of the conference, before any of the issues could be considered, Khrushchev demanded that Eisenhower apologize for the U-2 intelligence overflight of the Soviet Union in May. When Eisenhower refused, Khrushchev left the conference.

Vienna (Kennedy, Khrushchev)
June 1961

The status of Berlin was the major subject of discussion, but the conflict in Laos and the general question of disarmament were also on the agenda. Khrushchev's truculence on Berlin surprised and sobered Kennedy, but some progress was made when the two leaders agreed that further discussions on Laos should be continued at the Foreign Minister level.

Glassboro (Johnson, Kosygin)
June 1967

Hastily arranged and only agreed on after considerable haggling over a suitable location, the meeting at Glassboro, New Jersey was appended to Kosygin's visit to the United Nations where he had come to support the Arab nations' proposals for ending the Middle East conflict that had erupted earlier that month. In addition to the Middle East, disarmament and the Vietnam war were also discussed. Nothing came of a Soviet offer during the conference to serve as an intermediary with the North Vietnamese to negotiate a halt to the U.S. bombing of North Vietnam.

Moscow (Nixon and Brezhnev)
May 1972

At this meeting Nixon and Brezhnev signed the ABM Treaty and the SALT I Interim Agreement, both of which had been in negotiation for many months. Also concluded at Moscow were agreements on public health, environmental cooperation, incidents at sea, exchanges in science, technology, education and culture, and a Declaration of Basic Principles of Mutual Relations.

Washington (Nixon and Brezhnev)
June 1973

Nixon and Brezhnev discussed the maintenance and strengthening of international peace and a number of international and bilateral questions. The two leaders signed agreements on the Prevention of Nuclear War and on the Basic Principles of Negotiations on the Further Limitation of Strategic Offensive Arms. Other agreements signed at the summit dealt with scientific cooperation, agriculture, trade, and other bilateral issues. The joint communiqué expressed "deep satisfaction" with the conclusion during the preceding January of the Paris Agreement on Vietnam. President Nixon stated at Brezhnev's departure that the meeting had "built on the strong foundation that we laid a year ago."

Moscow (Nixon and Brezhnev)
June-July 1974

The president and the general secretary discussed arms control and several international and bilateral issues. The two leaders signed a protocol which further limited each side to one ABM site apiece instead of the two allowed in the 1972 ABM Treaty. The two also signed a Threshold Test Ban Treaty. The governments signed several other instruments dealing with scientific cooperation, cultural exchanges, and other bilateral matters. The communiqué "reaffirmed their agreement to hold such meetings regularly and when considered necessary for the discussion and solution of urgent questions."

Vladivostok (Ford, Brezhnev)
November 1974

At the Vladivostok meeting, which followed visits by President Ford to Japan and Korea, discussions focused on strategic arms limitations but included a number of bilateral and international issues, including the Middle East. Ford and Brezhnev in the SALT II negotiations reached agreement in principle on some of the basic elements subsequently incorporated in the 1979 treaty. They issued a joint statement on strategic offensive arms (the Vladivostok agreement) and a joint communiqué calling for continuing efforts at arms limitation and the development of economic cooperation.

Helsinki (Ford, Brezhnev)
July-August 1975

During two meetings at Helsinki, where both were attending the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, Ford and Brezhnev attempted unsuccessfully to reach further agreement on strategic arms limitations. In an exchange with reporters after their July 30 meeting, both called it "businesslike" and "friendly."

Vienna (Carter, Brezhnev)
June 1979

The SALT II Treaty was signed at the Vienna summit. Carter and Brezhnev also discussed other arms control issues including the continuation of the SALT process, the Middle East, Afghanistan, and several other international, bilateral, and trade issues. The two leaders signed several related agreements, and issued a joint statement of principles and basic guidelines for subsequent negotiations on the limitation of strategic arms.

Rajiv's India, one year on Rajiv Gandhi was an airline pilot before the assassination of his mother, Indira. He assumed her powers as prime minister of India and has exceeded the expectations of almost everyone. But, it's not all smooth flying, says John Elliott.

NEW DELHI — Shielded from the weather by large corrugated iron sheets strung out from the new but scruffy office building, about 1,500 men shout and gesticulate, sometimes hugging each other. A couple of floors below, crowds watch figures on a blackboard and jostle around a dirty staircase to hear the news from above.

This is the Bombay stock exchange, the scene of a business explosion which graphically illustrates the rapid changes which have begun to percolate through many parts of Indian life in the year since Mr. Rajiv Gandhi became Prime Minister.

Share prices rose more than 60 per cent in five months after the country's annual budget in March and one or two new issues at the peak were oversubscribed more than 150 times. The market, which is closed to foreigners, has cooled a little but an issue recently for a new Indian company to produce Gillette razor blades was oversubscribed more than 20 times.

The Delhi stock exchange is active, too — a potentially significant indicator, according to Mr. L.K. Jha, an elderly former civil servant who advises Mr. Gandhi on economic matters. "It means the rural rich from states like the Punjab and Haryana are investing too. If the flow of the farmer's funds has really begun, it's the beginning of exponential growth."

The funds raised are helping to finance entrepreneurial industrial development desperately needed in India, soaking up wealth from the black economy and reducing reliance on public-sector financing.

A year ago, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, the Indian Prime Minister, was gunned down in her garden by Sikh bodyguards in what was assumed to be revenge for her ordering the army into the Sikhs' holy temple in Amritsar.

Her son Rajiv, a 40-year-old ex-airline pilot with no previous ministerial experience, took over in the afternoon. The Bombay stock exchange moved gently upwards the next day, although this was hardly noticed as the country sunk into a state of shock and 3,000 Sikhs were killed by rioting followers of India's majority Hindu religion.

It is rare now to hear anyone regret the change of prime minister, although Mrs. Gandhi was worshipped by the rural masses of India's 760 million population and will be remembered by millions of people at memorial meetings.

Mr. Gandhi rapidly assumed authority and won a landslide general election victory for the Congress I Party at the end of December, mainly relying on his mother's memory. But she is rarely mentioned now and recently her name was studiously kept out of electioneering in the Punjab, following Mr. Gandhi's peace settlement with the Sikhs.

In addition to the Punjab settlement, Mr. Gandhi has also produced a potential solution for civil unrest in the north-eastern state of Assam, is trying to help solve Sri Lanka's ethnic troubles and will probably soon tackle potential unrest in the northern state of Kashmir.

Mr. Gandhi believes, and has inspired Indians of all ages and classes to believe, that such problems can be solved in a straightforward manner. He believes in positive political decision-making and has also attacked rampant corruption and bureaucratic inefficiency, although progress on this will be slow. Even opposition politicians are sometimes complimentary, Mr.

Atal Bihari Vajpayee, president of the Bharatiya Janata Party and a former foreign minister, says: "He has made a good beginning. India is moving. As opposed to Mrs. Gandhi he is good."

"The whole mood of the economy has changed, even though some businessmen are complaining about increased competition especially from abroad. In five years' time you'll definitely see the results of the changes, though that will not be the end," says Mr. Jha.

Mr. Gandhi inherited an economy strong for the short term, with declining inflation, a satisfactory balance of payments and a series of industrial reforms which had been started by his mother. But there is an urgent need to boost exports, in readiness for the late 1980s when India's debt repayments will start to build up. Mr. Gandhi himself recently condemned Indian industry's record of technological development as "pathetic and rubbishy."

On taking office he called for a "new work ethic" with "results, not procedure-oriented government."

Such targets will take many years to achieve because India is still in many ways an inefficient and corrupt country. Many of its people prefer to dodge decisions than to take a lead, and many continue to operate the rigid and debilitating divisions of the country's old caste system.

All basic industrial licensing has been swept away for about 25 industries, and rules relaxed which will allow bigger companies to grow into new sectors. Detailed licensing has been simplified into broad bands in many industries, most recently for electronics. Import restrictions have been eased on a wide range of goods needed for modernising industry, particularly in electronics, and foreign participation is being welcomed in most industrial areas.

But despite the opening doors, India is still a difficult and expensive place for foreign companies to work and the government is expert at negotiating the tightest prices and terms. Lloyds Bank is reducing its presence in the country because of high operating costs with low returns. "We have to wait and see whether there is an acceptance that foreign businesses should make any money here. It's not accepted at present. These guys think we owe it to them," says one battle-worn businessman.

Nevertheless, almost every company of any size in India is planning new investments, many with foreign technical or financial partners. The Finance Ministry says this has led to Rs20 billion ($1.66 billion) of investments taking place in the 25 de-licensed industries. The Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry estimates that 13 of the largest Indian companies are planning investments totalling Rs60 billion, a very large figure for India.

The total number of technical and equity foreign collaborations approved by the government jumped from 336 in the first half of last year to 440. But the surge in investments and in stock exchange activity — which is generating approaching Rs30 billion of new capital this year, double last year's figure — have yet to show up in official growth statistics. Industrial growth is running at under 6 per cent, compared with 7.7 per cent for the same period last year. The government is also worried that there has been little if any apparent growth in direct manufacturing employment, which accounts only for about 40 million people, or 13 per cent of the country's total workforce.

Concern about growing unemployment if India's many loss-making (or sick, as they are called) companies are allowed to die is sparking a major debate at a time when Mr. Gandhi's policies are meeting some criticism from people who prefer old-style protection. This has delayed a new policy to deal with sick industries; meanwhile, political pressure is increasing for import barriers to be maintained.

A normal monsoon means that this year's rice and wheat crops will be satisfactory and might total 160 million tonnes. This should help to keep inflation on the government's target of under 7 per cent for wholesale prices.

Tax reforms, which will be developed shortly into a long-term fiscal policy, plus the attack on the black economy, have yielded sharply-increasing tax revenues, which the Finance Ministry expects to exceed preliminary estimates of Rs220 billion by up to 20 per cent. This will help to keep the budgetary deficit within a forecast record Rs33.49 billion for 1985-86. Last year the outturn deficit was double the budgeted level.

But overall, economic development is being slowed by a lack of domestic and foreign resources at a time when international concessional aid is dwindling; this is shown up in the country's new five-year plan which, however, maintains a conservative approach to foreign commercial borrowings.

This is one element of Indian economic policy which has not changed under Rajiv. "The more we see what's happening to countries which have got into the debt trap, the more we're worried about the implications of going into more commercial borrowings," says Mr. S. Venkataraman, Finance Secretary. Appalling electric power and communications problems also continue to slow industrial development. "Industry should invest and insist that power is supplied; that railways run and that telephones should not just be a piece of furniture but also ring and carry a message," says Mr. Abid Husain, a distinguished civil servant and member of the Planning Commission.

And, whatever the economic progress, there are deep social and political problems to be tackled. Increased economic wealth and consumerism for the 100 million to 200 million best-off part of the population itself creates growing social tensions. As recent troubles in the prosperous states of Punjab and Gujarat have shown, it is those who have made some economic gains but still feel left behind and who cause most unrest. The 37 per cent of the population estimated to be below the poverty line is more quiescent.

But Mr. Gandhi's success in producing political settlements for states such as Punjab and Assam will itself create some problems, because he has had to give increased power to regional parties which are basically opposed to his Congress I party. This reflects a growing tendency towards regionalism in India which needs careful political management.

Internationally, Mr. Gandhi has to decide how to handle India's delicate relations with Pakistan. Border clashes between the two countries have increased in recent months and Mr. Gandhi has said that India will have to reconsider its nuclear policy if it is proved, as he believes, that Pakistan has, or is on the brink of having, a nuclear bomb.

Internal security is also bound to remain a problem after a period of such traumatic sectarian and political violence. — Financial Times news feature.

The sounds of eternity on a temporal tape recorder

By Harald Biskup

THOUSANDS OF West Germans have taken up an out-of-this-world hobby.

Members of the Association for Taped Voice Research (VTF) in Dusseldorf seriously claim that contact can be established with the hereafter with the help of an ordinary cassette recorder.

Taped voice research to prove life after death is in many ways related to spiritualism, which states that the disembodied spirits of the dead can communicate with the living in this world through mediums.

As opposed to the table-moving antics of certain spiritualists, however, the tapping of supernatural channels apparently requires no paranormal (beyond normal explanation) powers.

The cassette recorder functions as a medium.

Some parapsychologists claim that the voices are evoked by psychokinesis, the alteration of the state of an object by mental influence alone, and that their true origin is the subconscious of the person asking the questions on tape.

During the regular monthly meetings of VTF in Dusseldorf, things do get a little more wordy now and again.

When the collecting box is handed round, for example, to collect the money needed to hire the school assembly hall where the meetings, which used to be held in the back room of a pub, take place.

The people who come along to the monthly recording sessions donate generously; after all, as one woman points out, the VTF has "opened up a new world for me."

One man who had to leave early during the last session asks: "Did you get an answer from Paul Dahlke?"

The VTF chairman, Fidelio Koberle, feels obliged to tell the young man that "we shouldn't specialise in communicating with just one dead person. Maybe he doesn't want to talk to us."

Fidelio Koberle, casually dressed and seeming never at a loss for an answer, is sat in front of a cassette recorder, equipped with a pre-amplifier, a small sound mixer and a microphone.

"They're all normal middle-market pieces of equipment", he emphasises.

As 70-year-old Koberle, who is a qualified psychologist and personnel consultant, explains, "you establish a connection just like a hotel switchboard operator who plugs you in to your call."

Nothing to it, it seems. When Koberle began his trans-world calls 16 years ago, however, a voice from the next world told him to buy an expensive recorder. Advertising plugs up (or down) there too?

Koberle earns his living by compiling graphological reports for industry.

He regards voice research, however, as his "true vocation", although he warns against exaggerated expectations.

What he demonstrates at the VTF meetings is by no means representative but more of a fluke because of the "pressure to be successful."

He is usually more successful at home, without an audience.

Koberle would like to see this form of spiritualism freed from the stigma of the bizarre.

"There's no wailing and gnashing of teeth, the persons on the other side are a pretty happy crowd," Koberle explains, making the whole business sound like an ordinary everyday chat-chat.

For the newcomers in the hall he repeats his dictionary-type definition of taped voices.

The expression refers to "intelligent recorded statements which defy physical explanation."

The VTF stresses that taped voice research should not be "an end in itself."

"Its aim is to open up new perspectives for psychological and philosophical research by providing evidence for the existence of life after death."

Thousands of experimenters throughout Germany have made chatting with the deceased their hobby.

In many cases, the death of somebody in the family or of a close friend has prompted them to do so.

Koberle and his fellow communicators are convinced that the voices recorded on tape do not belong to living persons.

"And anyone who speaks," Koberle is quick to add, "cannot be dead."

The most surprising aspect is that, according to VTF members, anyone can "in principle" communicate with the dead.

"You don't even have to be 'mediumistic,' i.e. able to receive supernatural messages."

What is necessary, however, is a "sound philosophical foundation."

"Superstitious persons or persons who are easily scared," Koberle warns, "should not take up this hobby."

Anyone who is "too sceptical" is bound to encounter problems. A "reduced state of awareness" is best: "listening is an art."

Trained ears also find it a lot easier on this particular evening. Fidelio Koberle presents example from his own "demo cassette."

Dialogues blare out of the loudspeaker in the aisle from the TV series version of Das Boot.

The lieutenant-commander says: "You can rely on the diesel."

Koberle's cassette recording of the series, however, also has a message from the hereafter.

A voice can be heard saying "You can rely on Fidelio," Koberle calls this "phonetic transformation."

It is still a mystery who spoke via the commanders' voice.

Admittedly, considerable powers of imagination are needed to hear the version which Koberle feels is undeniable.

But no-one in the hall expresses any doubts; the feeling of solidarity is powerful.

"The voices need electro-acoustic raw material to become audible," Koberle explains.

He used to believe that the "completely sterile atmosphere of laboratories was the best place" but today he knows: "The best chances are with background noise."

Confirmed VTF believers usually come in for foreign language radio programmes.

While trying to establish contact with a particular person, for example, a football commentary in Finnish may provide the ideal background noise.

The questions asked and the "noise" are recorded and, if the dead have responded to the communication, their answers will be found (later on) somewhere on that recording.

Information on the best station to tune in to is also claimed to have been given by the dead.

In the middle of some Russian programme the piece of advice "the medium wave enables the best contact" can be heard in German.

VTF members swear by 1,480 kHz (known internally as the "Jurgenson wavelength").

The Swede Friedrich Jurgenson is said to be the "discoverer" of the taped voices.

Like Jurgenson, Koberle, who was accompanied by parapsychology, esoterics and occultism "since early childhood," also suffered ridicule and hostility.

However, even specialist phonetics experts still have no explanation of how the voices got on to the tape.

"We have tried everything that is technically possible to find a natural explanation — to no avail," says Heinz Schutz, head of the sound trick studio at the Westdeutscher Rundfunk radio station.

"We found no explanation for this phenomenon."

The Catholic theologian, Andreas Resch, however, professor for paranormology and clinical psychology at the Lateran University in Rome, warns that it is "too early to draw the conclusion that the voices come from the dead. This has not yet been corroborated."

During the special VTF conference commemorating ten years of the association's existence, Resch encouraged the taped voice researcher "to continue to work empirically but to show restraint when it comes to interpretations."

Sound technician Heinz Schutz admits that there is often too much "wishful thinking."

A qualified electronics specialist, a switchboard operator and a sound technician sit on the association's committee.

Together with association chairman Koberle they are trying to lead their hobby in an air of scientific seriousness.

Koberle has the final say when it comes to "questions of authenticity," because no-one else wants to make himself unpopular.

Koberle has already been nicknamed the "voice killer."

"We listen to the material very carefully to find out whether it is just a CB operator or a paranormal voice."

"Sometimes," Koberle sighs, "our friends over there make fun of us."

He presses the playback button and a voice can be heard trying to communicate with a deceased VTF member.

"Konstantin, what do you want to say to me?" After a while a croaking voice answers: "Nothing, Spezi, later."

Again Koberle is convinced: "That was Konstantin."

He is just as convinced in the case of a Catholic priest from Switzerland, who also indulged in the same hobby when he was alive.

Koberle wanted to find out whether there was life after death. The answer he received from the dead priest was "Yes, for fools."

The dead, Koberle continues, "wait for the gaps and then start speaking."

Admittedly, the spirits are not always in a talkative mood.

A great deal of patience is needed.

"I'm calling my father, Gunter. I want him to say something nice to me. Thank you." — "I'm calling my friend, Dieter. How are you? Thank you."

Koberle would like to discover the true cause of the death of the Bavarian king, Ludwig II: "Was it an accident, murder or suicide? Thank you."

A colleague of Koberle in Vienna, managed to solve a treacherous murder case with the help of taped voices.

On this particular evening, no-one answers Koberle's questions. The only voice to be heard is that of the janitor shouting outside.

"Not a very productive session," Koberle is forced to admit. No reason to be discouraged.

"Last time we were able to communicate with the captain of the launch which sank in the Hamburg harbour."

Two women at the meeting feel encouraged: one of them calls her mother-in-law, the other tries to get in touch with Romy Schneider.

The tension rises. "Listen to the rhythm, a woman's voice with a metallic ring to it, crackling."

How does Koberle feel about this voice? It is difficult to hear anything apart from the typical whistling sound of the medium wave.

He puts his headphones on. "It sounds like 'You've had a good life' or something like that," he says after long dramatic pauses, as if deciphering an almost illegible letter.

A man from Duisburg says that he has noticed how the voices of the dead "mumble a lot."

This is obviously true of Romy Schneider. A woman's voice can just about be heard, but it's difficult for anybody to understand what she is saying.

Koberle helps out: "There will soon be a return."

The word most frequently used by the voice from the beyond is "wait." Sometimes a message is given without living persons having asked for them.

There is a wide range of contact persons, after all, "you get fed up with talking to granddad all the time."

For some of the just under 2,000 VTF members ("from a crane driver to a university professor") the temptation to tap the supernatural wavelengths has become a "proper obsession."

"You can get really hooked on it."

Sometimes, however, you can't be sure that you've got the desired person at the other end. Too much whispering.

Koberle wants to make sure that people know they are talking to him and no-one else when he goes to meet his maker.

With the help of a little signature tune, perhaps the overture from Beethoven's "Fidelio" — Kolner Stadt-Anzeiger.

Monks, murder and machinations in a West German monastery

By Susanne Hoell

Reuter

KIEDRICH, West Germany — In a secluded 12th century Cistercian monastery, a devious murder plot is being hatched.

The 3,500 inhabitants of this tiny wine-growing village on the banks of the Rhine have for days spoken of nothing but the tangled web of assassination and intrigue that has ensnared the monastery's occupants.

A detective has already been called in, none other than Sean Connery, better known as 007. James Bond.

The Razamatatz of the film world has descended on unsuspecting Kiedrich. The abbey has had its kitchen turned into a torture chamber and an army of Italian carvers is at work redesigning the choir stall.

This week, shooting started on a 17-million-dollar film based on Umberto Eco's world best-selling novel The Name Of The Rose.

The real monks have long left the monastery, driven out in 1803. To day, after a short period as a prison and a mental institution, it serves as a cellar for the region's white wine.

For French director Jean-Jacques Annaud, the picturesque German monastery came closest to the scene of Eco's middle ages thriller set in a remote Italian abbey.

Sean Connery, cast in the role of Eco's detective-monk William of Baskerville, is not at all amused by parallels to his death-defying stunts as secret agent 007.

With a full grey beard and horn-rimmed spectacles, the 55-year-old Scottish actor is still feeling his way into the part of a Franciscan monk.

"My experience of monasteries is limited," he told reporters visiting the set. "But I have visited monasteries around my home town of Edinburgh."

For Kiedrich's mayor Siegfried Siems, Connery is the best possible advertisement for the village and its wine.

Connery's adversary is Murray Abraham, who won an Oscar for his portrayal of the jealous and embittered court composer Antonio Salieri in "Amadeus". He plays the role of Bernardo Gui, a corrupt ambassador of the Pope sent to the abbey to punish heretics and carry out an inquisition.

The filming, which started last Monday, is due to last five weeks, with director Annaud seeking to recreate the medieval atmosphere of 1327 down to the finest detail of the monks' oak chests and the scribes' desks.

It was perhaps inevitable that Eco's hugely popular first novel would be turned into a film.

Annaud, best known for his portrayal of the stone age in "Quest for Fire", considered himself a natural choice as director having graduated from the Sorbonne with a degree in medieval studies.

Vienna gets its first lady carriage driver — after 300 years

By Stephanie Nebehay

Reuter

VIENNA — For the first time since horse-drawn carriages stopped showing visitors around imperial Vienna 300 years ago, a woman is at the reins.

Elisabeth "Sissy" Ringl, 24, is joined the other carriage-drivers or "flakers" waiting for tourists outside St. Stephen's cathedral, a city landmark.

"I wanted to begin driving when I was 18 years old, but my father would not let me because of the men," she told Reuters. "But I have been riding horses since childhood."

Ringl, who sold sporting goods for seven years, said her new job was fun, but added: "Some of the drivers did not want me and won't greet me. But I get along with the younger ones."

Her pretty face and petite figure contrast with the image of a flaker in this conservative city — burly, bewhiskered and red-nosed. She wears the characteristic jacket but rarely dons the traditional black bowler hat, saying it gets in the way.

There is no law barring women from being flakers, but Ringl was the first to break the tradition. The 34 men drivers, including Ringl's father, have mixed feelings about it, but said she was capable.

"She grew up with horses," one flaker said. "She does the job with joy, which is important in this profession."

Ringl and the other drivers said it was a dangerous job requiring intuition about how horses would react to noisy traffic and strength to control them if they panicked.

"It is a true man's profession," said a driver of 15 years' experience. "A horse can become frightened and it is not easy to get them to stop."

Ringl agreed, but said: "Something can always go wrong with horses — it can happen to anyone. Horses often rear up when frightened, and there is no brake on the carriage."

Randa Habib's Corner

In praise of the sporting spirit

IT WAS the ceremony marking the end of the Amman Little League soccer season. They were all there in the field: parents, more excited than their children; tots, juniors, mids, and seniors, beautiful in their uniforms; all listening to the 1985 championship results.

Parents eagerly awaited the proud moment when one of their children would receive a hard-earned silver medal or golden cup.

Of course, not every child was a winner. While the parents of the champions were proud as peacocks, those of the losers made excuses: "My son was often sick," or "My son sprained his ankle during the finals," or "I just don't understand, my son's team didn't play like it used to."

These parents could learn a lesson from their children.

Although some were naturally sad and perhaps envious of their opponents' good fortune, they played fair and were good sports. I saw one boy from the winning junior team rush over to his friend, who is goalkeeper from another team, and console him: "Your team was very good, too. It just happened that we won, but you played beautifully."

So once again another successful soccer season draws to a close. The season provided a lot of healthy exercise in the spirit of friendly competition for the kids and exciting entertainment for parents and spectators.

As is usual in these kinds of activities, it was a few over-competitive coaches, not the kids, who created a few problems, but these were soon forgotten with the realization that a defeat in a soccer match is not the end of the world.

Well done, Amman Little League, and best wishes for the next season.

France secures World Cup berth

PARIS (R) — France, serene European champions in 1984, finally weathered the anxieties of 1985 and secured World Cup qualification thanks to the brilliance of Michel Platini, whose goals sank Yugoslavia 2-0 Saturday night.

The masters of Europe made heavy going of the long path leading to Mexico, reaching their goal as 20th qualifiers long after most other leading contenders, and their vital Group Four finale was an understandably nervous occasion till the end.

"It's a blessing and a relief. It's a great feeling of well-being," team chief Henri Michel said Sunday.

In the end they overhauled Bulgaria to top the group after the Bulgarians, already qualified, were beaten 2-1 in East Germany Saturday night. As semi-finalists in the 1982 World Cup in Spain, France expect to be seeded in 1986, French Football Federation President Jean Fournet-Fayard said.

Platini, whose goals helped ensure World Cup qualification in crucial wins over Bulgaria in 1977 and The Netherlands in 1981, rose to the big occasion again.

He put France ahead after two minutes with a curling free-kick and sealed Yugoslavia's fate in the 72nd minute with a supreme left-footed drive from the edge of the box squeezed low inside the keeper's left post.

But France were not at their best and the nervous night might have ended badly if goalkeeper Joel Bats had not made a brave second half save at the feet of Hristo Stokich. "It wasn't all perfect or brilliant," team chief Michel said.

Platini said the team had not played so badly at their Parc Des Princes stadium home for a long time but added: "The essential thing is we know we can improve a lot."

Michel said: "We're going to be much more relaxed and calm now. For the coming matches we will not be under the sentence of a result. That will allow us to work differently and calmly to improve certain things."

Michel will reunite his squad from December 23 to January 4 at their mountain base in the Pyrenees, returning in May before setting out in the time to adapt to the altitude and time change.

Several key French players — Platini and midfield partners Alain Giresse and Jean Tigana, Rocheteau and defender Maxime Bossis — are over 30 and approaching the end of their impressive international soccer careers.

But Michel does not believe their age will cause problems and points out other teams are in a similar position. He said: "It has not been proved physiologically that players of a certain age recuperate less well than younger ones. The older players showed that in yesterday's match."

World Open Squash meet begins today in Cairo

CAIRO (R) — The world's top players start battling it out here Monday for $60,000 at stake in the World Open Squash Championship, with holder Jahangir Khan of Pakistan clear favourite to retain his title.

World number three, Australian Chris Dittmar, will not be playing after injuring a knee playing Australian rules football in August.

But fellow Australians Greg Pollard and Ross Thorne, respectively fourth and ninth seeds, are already warming up along with such top names as Pakistan's amar Zaman and Magsood Ahmed, New Zealand's Ross Norman and Britain's Hiddy Jahan.

The tournament has attracted 118 entries, with the top 26 seeds grouped in a main draw and the rest fighting it out to decide which six will join them in the last 32.

The seeds also include the U.S.'s top players of American Squash (hardball) aces Ned Edwards and Mark Talbot, and Egypt's Gamal Awad and Ahmed Safwat, ranked 18th and 19th respectively. Egyptian number one Awad, however, may be ruled out by a foot injury.

Khan, unbeaten for more than four years, meets Britain's Martin Bodimeade in the first round. The final rounds start on Nov. 21 and the winner will collect $9,000 while the runner-up gets $6,000.

Lion-killer Bol quickly tames the U.S. press

By Robert Green
Reuters

WASHINGTON — It's a long way from lion country in Sudan to big-time basketball in America, but 2.3 metre Dinka tribesman Manute Bol is bridging the gap.

"It's nice here, the people are nice," says the polite, soft-spoken Bol as encircling reporters jot down every word. As for the rigours of being a skinny newcomer among brawny professionals in the National Basketball Association (NBA):

"I don't know about offence. On defence, I can play anybody. But I've still got a lot to learn."

Bol is trying to win a place with the NBA's Washington Bullets, and his unusual background and amazing physique — the tallest player ever in a league full of seven-footers, yet stick-thin at only 95.5 kilograms — have made him an instant celebrity. He is a godsend to U.S. sportswriters who love alliterative nicknames.

His ability to stuff a ball through the three metre high basket standing flat-footed led to "Dinka Dunker." Sports Illustrated magazine has called him "The Sudanese Swatter" for his ease at blocking shots.

Bol appears to be handling the pressure well for a young man — he is about 23 but is unsure of his exact age — who learned English just a few years ago.

Born in the village of Gogrial in western Sudan, he herded cattle as a boy and — in an incident played up in the U.S. press — once killed a lion with a spear.

He shrugs it off, saying the beast was sleeping.

Descendant of a long line of huge men — his grandfather was even taller than him at 2.37 metres — he liked athletics and recalls: "I tried playing soccer one year but I broke my toe."

He took up basketball in 1979 and went to Khartoum to join the Sudan's national team. In 1983 an American coach saw him and persuaded him to come to the United States to play for Cleveland State University in Ohio.

He later transferred to University of Bridgeport in Connecticut, a smaller college that has an English-language programme for foreigners. After a successful last season, he left saying he wanted to become a professional to earn money for his family in Sudan.

Most NBA teams thought he was too inexperienced and scrapping to play against professionals.

E. Germany overcomes Bulgaria, but to no avail

EAST BERLIN (R) — East Germany beat Bulgaria 2-1 in the snow and ice of the Karl-Marx-Stadt Saturday, but were foiled by France in their efforts to qualify for the World Cup soccer finals.

The narrow victory brought wild applause from a 32,000 crowd, but many of them knew already from their transistor radios that it had all been for nothing.

A draw in Paris between France and Yugoslavia and a three goal victory here would have carried East Germany to Mexico but it was not to be.

East German team manager Bernd Stange said: "We went all out in attack but the Bulgarians fought well, even though their place in the finals was already secured. With this snow and these conditions a three-goal victory was just not on."

Midfielder Uwe Zoesche set the chilled crowd alight in the third minute when he headed a free kick past goalkeeper Ilya Valov after top goalscorer Rainer Ernst had been felled near the penalty area.

Doe detains opposition leaders 'for their own safety'

ABIDJAN (R) — Liberian military ruler Samuel Doe has ordered his armed forces not to harm opposition politicians arrested in the wake of last Tuesday's unsuccessful coup, a Liberian radio station reported.

Gen. Doe also told the chairman of the Liberian Action Party (LAP), the chief opposition group, that leading figures in the party were being detained for their own protection.

With the Liberian capital, Monrovia, largely cut off from the outside world, concern has grown over the fate of LAP leaders, including Jackson Doe, who mounted a strong challenge to Gen. Samuel Doe in last month's presidential election.

The U.S. State Department Saturday said Liberia had denied the arrested politicians were executed, but said the United States remained "deeply concerned at bloodshed that has occurred" following Tuesday's failed coup bid.

Gen. Doe's comments were reported by Radio Elwa, a religious station broadcasting from Monrovia.

It said Gen. Doe had warned his new armed forces commander, Brig.-Gen. Rudolph Kolacco, whose predecessor was sacked on Thursday, that he would personally face punishment if any of the arrested politicians were harmed.

The report did not name politicians held for their own safety other than LAP chairman Tuan Wreh, to whom Gen. Doe was said to have spoken after he turned himself in to the authorities.

Radio Elwa also said the editor-in-chief of the state-owned Liberian Broadcasting System, Charles Gbenyan, was shot dead Saturday in a tussle with security forces who were trying to disarm him while arresting him.

The radio said Gen. Doe told diplomats Saturday night that the rebels had planned their invasion in Ivory Coast, to the east of Liberia, and then travelled to Sierra Leone, which borders Liberia to the west, where more rebels were recruited.

It quoted Gen. Doe, briefing the diplomats near Monrovia, as saying the rebels had travelled in a truck provided by Sierra Leone's police before crossing the Mano River into Liberia.

Gen. Doe said the rebels were trained at a Sierra Leone military barracks and that he had asked Sierra Leone's leader, Siaka Stevens, for cooperation in arresting them.

Soon after the attempted insurrection, Liberia accused coup leader Brig.-Gen. Thomas Juiwonka of hiring Cuban and Sierra Leonean mercenaries. Gen. Juiwonka was shot dead by one of Gen. Doe's bodyguards two days ago.

Liberians and foreigners took advantage of the weekend to stay home and avoid trouble at numerous army checkpoints. There was a virtual blackout on communications and Monrovia's Robertsfield International Airport was still shut. The West African state remained under a night curfew and Gen. Doe has said that Liberians and foreigners found in the streets after six p.m. will be shot on sight.

The U.S. State Department said in a statement Saturday: "We have been told by the Liberian leadership that the arrested political leaders have been taken into protective custody and that reports that some of them have been executed are false."

It said the United States remained "deeply concerned about the bloodshed that has occurred" following Tuesday's failed coup.

The State Department also said "there seems to have been a substantial loss of life" in the coup attempt. It said the Liberian government had acknowledged this and had called for an end to ethnic violence provoked by the failed coup.

Asked if the coup aftermath could affect U.S. aid, State Department Spokesman Bruce Ainsworth said that "a government's observance of human rights is by law and administration policy among the most important factors in influencing all aspects of bilateral relations."

He said the administration would reserve more specific comment "until we have more precise knowledge of the situation in Liberia."

In 1985 Liberia received $77 million from the United States, including $15 million in development assistance, $6 million in food aid, $43 million in economic aid and $13.2 million in military aid.

"The U.S. government has conveyed to all levels of the Liberian government the importance we attach to its insuring that due process is granted to all those who have been taken into custody," the State Department said.

"We have not yet received a satisfactory reply but we have been told by the Liberian leadership that the arrested political leaders have been taken into protective custody and that reports that some of them have been executed are false."

Superwives to meet in Geneva

GENEVA (AP) — For the first time in 10 years, the American and Soviet first ladies will be meeting at a superpower summit and both Nancy Reagan and Raisa Gorbachev are reportedly taking it very seriously.

While U.S. President Ronald Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev grapple with the problems of world peace at a two-day summit starting Tuesday, their wives will be holding two summits of their own over tea.

Mrs. Reagan has said she is intrigued by the new ways of the Soviet first lady, whose smart clothes, sharp mind and winning ways made her an instant celebrity on visits to London and Paris during the past year.

Mrs. Gorbachev is apparently also intrigued. The Soviet News Agency TASS recently started sending a correspondent to cover some of Mrs. Reagan's activities.

In preparation for the meeting, Mrs. Reagan has been watching coverage of the Gorbachevs on television, reading about them in newspapers and reading books on Soviet history and literature, said Elaine Crispin, her press secretary.

"But there's very little background coverage on the couple, unlike the volumes and volumes that's been written on the Reagans," Mrs. Crispin said in a telephone interview.

Soviet officials have refused to give any details of Mrs. Gorbachev's schedule or discuss her meeting with the American first lady. But one acquaintance of Mrs. Reagan, who refused to be identified, said: "I think the Russians take her very seriously."

Mrs. Crispin said she didn't think Mrs. Reagan would have an agenda of "talking points" for the tea — Tuesday's at Maison de Saussure, the chateau loaned to the Reagans by the Aga Khan, and Wednesday's at the Soviet mission.

"I think she always enjoys meeting new people, finding out new things about countries. Meeting with the spouses of world leaders has always been useful to improve the understanding between the people and I'm sure she's looking forward to it," Mrs. Crispin said.

The superwives will find they have several things in common: Both are well-travelled grandmothers who enjoy wearing elegant clothes and have proven to be great public relations assets to their husbands.

Mrs. Reagan, a former actress who met her actor husband in Hollywood, is known to have a great deal of influence over the president. She keeps a close eye on his activities to guard against fatigue, especially following his cancer operation in July.

Mrs. Gorbachev, who is still philosophy lecturer at Moscow University where she met her husband when they were both students, has travelled widely with him, both at home and abroad.

Car park blast kills 2 in Botswana

GABORONE (R) — An explosion in a hospital car park killed two people and seriously injured two others in the town of Mochudi north of Gaborone, Botswana police said.

Police Commissioner, Simon Hirschfeld said the blast was believed to have been caused by a bomb. "We have no idea who could be behind this incident," he added.

The explosion occurred in the car park of the Deborah Relief Memorial Hospital, run by the Dutch Reformed Church, in Mochudi, about 30 kilometres from the Botswana capital.

In February, two black South African refugees were slightly hurt when a house in a Gaborone suburb was destroyed by a bomb and in May another was killed when his booby-trapped car blew up.

Nationalists score major victory in Taiwan polls

TAIPEI (R) — Taiwan's ruling Nationalist Party scored an overwhelming victory in local elections despite two major scandals which rocked the government this year.

An election commission spokesman told reporters 71 per cent of Taiwan's 11 million electorate turned out for Saturday's poll, about the same level as in previous elections.

The Nationalist Party (Kuomintang), which has ruled Taiwan since 1949, led on county candidates by wide margins in elections for a provincial assembly, city councils, mayors and county magistrates posts. It won nearly 80 per cent of the 200 offices contested, the spokesman said.

The opposition Tangwai groups won only 17 seats — a loss of three — in the 77-member assembly, a watchdog body overseeing the government-appointed provincial administration.

A Kuomintang spokesman described the victory as an indication of continued confidence in the ruling party by Taiwan's 19 million people.

The Tangwai, meaning literally "those outside the party," gained control of four counties, one more than before, and about the same number of seats in the Taipei and Kaohsiung city councils.

The Nationalists won despite two major scandals. Three of Taiwan's top intelligence officials were involved in the murder of dissident writer Henry Liu in California last year. Vice-Admiral Wang Hsi-Ling, the island's military intelligence chief, was jailed for life here in April for the killing.

White House irritated by Weinberger letter

GENEVA (R) — The White House has expressed irritation over the leak of a letter written by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger giving tough advice on the U.S. summit approach on arms control.

Mr. Weinberger, who lost several interdepartmental battles on arms control policy, has not been included in the American contingent in Geneva but is represented by two of his deputies.

White House Spokesman Larry Speakes told reporters aboard the presidential aircraft: "The president would have preferred to read it in the Oval Office, rather than in the New York Times."

A senior administration official, asked if the leakage constituted sabotage, replied: "Sure it was."

Disclosure of the message, which was attached to a report on Soviet arms violations, came as Mr. Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev prepared to meet for the first superpower summit in more than six years.

Mr. Weinberger urged Mr. Reagan to avoid an agreement pledging U.S. adherence to the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT-2). He also said Mr. Reagan should not give Moscow any assurances that he would limit his "Star Wars" programme to a narrow interpretation of the anti-ballistic missile (ABM) treaty governing research and deployment of such defence systems.

Rajneesh calls on world to unite against U.S.

NEW DELHI (R) — Indian Guru Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh, who ran a controversial commune in the United States for four years, said here Sunday Americans were sub-human monsters who should be destroyed.

In a scathing criticism of the U.S., Rajneesh said charges of violating immigration laws which led to his abrupt departure from the U.S. last Thursday were false and he alleged he was tortured while in prison for 12 days.

Rajneesh, who arrived in New Delhi Sunday by private jet, left the U.S. only hours after pleading guilty in Portland, Oregon, to charges of arranging sham marriages at his commune to help foreign followers remain in the U.S.

Rajneesh, 53, said he pleaded guilty to the charges because his life was in danger from U.S. politicians who feared the influence of his 300,000 followers in many parts of the world.

"The whole world should get united to put the monster United States in its place. It should be hushed up forever," Rajneesh told a press conference. "They are sub-humans."

He said his experience convinced him the U.S. and not the Soviet Union was the greatest threat to the world's future.

Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh

Rajneesh, who left 90 Rolls Royces and a small fleet of aircraft in the U.S., said while in prison he was denied medical facilities for his diabetes, forced to listen to endless television broadcasts and put in a cell with a prisoner isolated from other inmates of Portland Jail because he was a carrier of the disease Hepes.

Rajneesh plans never again to leave India where he first established one of his communes in the early 1970's.

He said his native India was the only country left in the world where a soul could be free and advised his followers in the U.S. to leave immediately for other countries.

Death toll rises in South African unrest

JOHANNESBURG (R) — Two black men were killed in separate incidents overnight in continued sporadic unrest in various parts of South Africa, police said.

A spokesman said one man was killed when a policeman fired a shotgun into a stone-throwing crowd at the black township of Blue Waters in central Orange Free State.

A second man died in a stone-throwing incident in Brandfort, also in the Free State, he said. The occupant of a house which was being stoned threw stones back at the attackers and one man died on the way to hospital after being hit on the head.

A hand grenade exploded in a house in Guguletu in the western Cape, seriously injuring a 35-year-old black woman.

The spokesman said there were several other isolated incidents of protests in other parts of the Cape province.

Troops continued to carry out the duties of hospital workers at the huge Baragwanath Complex in Soweto where more than 1,000 workers and student nurses were sacked after going on strike.

Senior medical official Hennie Van Wyk said that the 3,000-bed Baragwanath Hospital had sacked over 1,000 workers and student nurses. Police arrested 718 auxiliary workers there last week after violent protests over pay and conditions.

"Units from the South African army have already provided catering and hygiene service back-up," Van Wyk said.

Other troops and civil defence volunteers have been called in to help those among the normally 8,000-strong staff who have not been sacked. Trade unions said that minimum wages at the hospital are 150 rand ($58) a month.

Black nationalist leader Winnie Mandela arrived in Cape Town from Soweto Saturday night in open defiance of a police order to return to a remote township where she was banished in 1977.

She plans to see her husband Nelson, jailed for life for plotting revolution but now in hospital in Cape Town after prostate gland surgery.

Asked by Reuters if she feared arrest for violating the banning order, designed to silence her still vocal opposition to apartheid race discrimination, Winnie Mandela said: "It is not even worth my attention to consider it."

Nelson Mandela is still recognised as leader of the outlawed African National Congress, the main guerrilla group fighting white rule in South Africa.

Former African National Congress (ANC) President James Moroka was buried quietly Saturday in sharp contrast with South African township funerals for victims of black protest violence.

Elderly men in suits gathered to bury Moroka, who was 93. When the ANC was outlawed in 1960 and turned to guerrilla tactics against white rule, he was already fading from the limelight in radical black politics.

He spent his last years farming in Thaba'chu, now an isolated fragment of the seven-part tribal homeland of Bophuthatswana, set up on the apartheid principle that blacks had no permanent place in the 87 per cent of South Africa's land reserved for whites. South Africa has declared Bophuthatswana independent, a status which no other country recognises.

Court to rule on mistrial petition in Aquino case

MANILA (R) — The Philippine supreme court will rule Monday on a petition asking it to declare a mistrial in the Benigno Aquino murder case and stop the trial court delivering judgment on Wednesday.

Military Chief Fabian Ver, a kinsman and confidant of President Ferdinand Marcos, and 25 others have been charged in connection with the murder of the opposition leader.

More than 30 lawyers, as well as other Filipinos, have petitioned the supreme court asking it to declare a mistrial and order a new hearing because the trial court had violated the due process of law.

Gen. Ver, on leave to defend himself, is widely expected to be cleared. Mr. Marcos has said he will be reinstated if acquitted.

Washington opposes Gen. Ver's reinstatement and many U.S. officials see him as a bar to reform in the armed forces.

Sen. Aquino, a longtime political rival of Mr. Marcos, was shot dead at Manila airport in August 1983 on returning home from self-imposed exile in the United States. His alleged assassin, Rolando Galman — said to be a Communist agent — was killed by airport security guards.

There was speculation in Manila that the court set Wednesday for the verdict because world attention would be concentrated on the Reagan-Gorbachev summit in Geneva.

One court official, asked if there would be enough room for television crews and reporters in the small court room, expressed surprise and said: "Will there be any here? I thought they would all be in Geneva."

Sen. Aquino's murder is expected to be one of the major issues in presidential elections expected in January or February. The former senator's wife, Corason, is a potential opposition candidate in the contest with Mr. Marcos, who has held power for nearly 20 years.

Mountains of clothes, drugs and food pile up at Colombia disaster aid depot

BOGOTA (R) — Mountains of clothes, drugs and food donated for victims of Wednesday's volcanic disaster piled up as nuns, boy scouts, medical students and military police joined to man an emergency aid depot here.

A steady stream of cars queued outside Bogota's main exhibition centre for the third day running, as Colombians responded to the devastation which killed 22,000 of their compatriots.

Maria Cristina Salazar, a volunteer worker taking cash donations in three huge money boxes, said rich and poor had given alike.

"Poor people, middle class people, even children bringing their savings," she told Reuters.

"We are Colombians and we must all help each other," said government worker Luis Albaracin as he drove up with his wife and two children.

"We have children's clothes and drugs... just a drop in the ocean so that people can solve their problems."

Outside the cavernous warehouses, civil defence workers in orange overalls loaded trucks while other filled jerry-cans and plastic buckets with drinking water for the disaster area.

Dozens of volunteers ran from the cars with boxes and plastic bags which were tossed along chains of helpers waiting inside.

Sweat dripping from his sun-baked face, Jairo Suarez said he had come to help because he knew the area of the catastrophe. "I have some friends in the area. I know it... We have to help our brother Colombians."

Silvestre Granado, a dental student at Colombia's National University, scanned a reference book as he checked boxes of drugs laid out on a table.

"People bring them all mixed up and we sort them out. But some of them don't have their generic name so we don't know what they are," he said.

Outside, a radio and television station took messages from people desperate to contact relatives living in the shadow of the Nevado Del Ruiz Volcano.

Tearful women, seeing a journalist and desperate for any means of contacting their loved ones, pressed forward to give names of missing relatives and telephone numbers for messages.

Radio operator Elmer Canas said more than 10,000 requests for information had been broadcast and people were still arriving with scrawled notes.

After 60 hours almost totally immersed in mud, Mariene Del Angorita, a plump woman in her 30s, was plucked from the jaws of hell Saturday, one of the few survivors of Colombia's volcanic avalanche.

Her saviour was a quite-spoken compatriot called Edgar Cardenas, who clung to a small hovering helicopter as he hauled her from the dark sludge that would soon have become her tomb.

Only last Wednesday, Mariene was cooking for her family in their home in the picturesque town of Armero. At the same time, Edgar was working as an electrician in Bogota, the capital.

Neither could have had any idea that their fates were soon to be linked by the landslide of ash, gravel, and mud that surged down through Armero from the volcano on the night from Wednesday to Thursday.

As his pilot tried to hold their tiny craft steady over Mariene's head, unable to land on what was a thick lake of mud, Edgar, a civil defence volunteer, reached down and pulled her into the craft and safety.

Reluctantly relating his story at the Mariquita airstrip, where he flew the latest victim for treatment, Edgar said she was the seventh person he had saved from slow death Saturday.

He had lost count of those he rescued Friday.

As he spoke, Edgar, in muddied overalls, winced as a nurse poured alcohol onto his head as he received on his hands.

Then he was rushing off, anxious to get back to Armero, where he had earlier spotted another woman and a young boy he still hoped to rescue.

As he left, Mariene was lifted from a stretcher, stripped of the white sheet in which she has been wrapped, and sat on a muddy step in the airport hall. The dried mud that covered her gave her a deathly look. Red cross men and nurses started to wash it off.

Mariene was one of 20 survivors arrived Saturday at the makeshift hospital in the windowless building at Mariquita airstrip. Its floor covered with ash from the volcano.

A 13-year-old girl stuck to her neck in water and rubble since the volcanic eruption died Saturday despite three days of desperate rescue efforts, eyewitnesses said.

Omaya Sanchez went into a coma as mouth-to-mouth resuscitation efforts failed. French photographer Frank Fournier said.

"It is horrible, but we have to think about the living," Omaya's mother said. Caracol Radio asked for a minute's silence.

The girl's brother Alvaro Enrique, 12, escaped. Their father died under the rubble of their house.

The mother, a nurse, cried silently when she heard of Omaya's death and asked for prayers for her dead relatives.

Pekingers take to fast food

PEKING (R) — The Peking city government plans to double the number of outlets serving takeaway hamburgers, hot dogs, instant noodles and meat dumplings because of growing demand, the New China News Agency said Sunday. It said the present daily capacity of 140,000 instant meals a day would be doubled by next year, to meet demand from officials, young people and the 800,000 Chinese who visit the capital daily and "get impatient with the long waits in restaurants."

A meal of meat dumplings and fried dishes costs up to 2.5 yuan (78 cents) at a railway station fast-food outlet. The agency said demand in the city for bread, buns and noodles, all made from flour, had doubled over the past five years.

Chinese singer arrested for immoral conduct

PEKING (R) — Top-selling Chinese pop star Zhang Xing has been arrested for immoral conduct after making two fans pregnant a total of nine times. The Shanghai Wen Hui Bao reported that Zhang, 23, had attracted the attention of many young girls through his performances of pop songs and had had sex with many of them. Zhang, famous for his renditions of Hong Kong and Taiwan songs, hit the top of the charts with numbers like Tell Me, Lonely Boy and There's More Than One Road to Success. When one of the girls threatened to report him, the paper said he replied: "You want to sue me? Go ahead. The law will be on my side." All nine pregnancies were aborted. Zhang, who won a guitar competition in Shanghai last year, was arrested in the city on Monday as he stepped off a ferry. "As the public security officers snapped the handcuffs onto his wrist, Zhang received a clear answer to the question of which side the law is on," the newspaper said.

Court discharges 2-year-old defendant

ISLAMABAD (R) — An astonished Pakistani magistrate discharged a two-year-old boy who was carried into his court sucking a pacifier to face charges of violating game preservation laws, the Karachi daily Dawn reported. The newspaper said a local game warden in Punjab province had charged the child rather than his parents with keeping partridges without a government permit at the family home. Magistrate Raza Jafri of Sargodha immediately dismissed the case against the boy, Mohammad Amir, it said.

Charles, Diana to give thank-you party for rock stars

LONDON (R) — Prince Charles and his wife Diana, Britain's future King and Queen, are to throw a thank-you party for rock and pop stars who had performed in aid of the prince's Trust Charity, Buckingham Palace has said. The party, an informal hour-long reception in a London Recording Studio on Tuesday, was a way of thanking people who had performed at concerts for the charity over the last three years, a spokesman said. He refused to reveal the guest list but the Mirror newspaper said stars including the Rolling Stones, Duran Duran, Spandau Ballet and Phil Collins would attend. Princess Diana is a keen pop music fan but the spokesman discouraged Mirror speculation that the reception would be a "rock and roll rave-up" or the "biggest pop party in the world." "It is an informal private reception — the traditional for the Prince of Wales to thank people," he said.

Estrogen treatment can extend lives of breast cancer victims

BOSTON (R) — Breast cancer victims can live nearly 1 1/2 times longer if their tumours are sensitive to the female hormone Estrogen and they are treated with Estrogen and chemotherapy, according to a medical study. The study, reported in the New England Journal of Medicine, compared different cancer treatments of women with advanced breast cancer. A University of Minnesota team led by Dr. David Kline, found that women whose cancer cells had special receptors for grabbing the hormone lived far longer than women without those Estrogen receptors.

We are unhappy at the lack of organized bridge activity on college campuses. Not too long ago, more than 400 schools took part in an annual Intercollegiate Pair Championship. And back in the 1960s, there was a collegiate pair tournament. This hand, composed by Larry Roeder and Jeff Rubens, is from the 1967 event.

Note the suggested response to South's opening one no trump bid, which might raise some eyebrows. How can North possibly invite,
